

Importance of Community Building

Adults with CSBD, having aged out of the school system, are often isolated and emotionally vulnerable. They flourish when given opportunities to engage with their communities. Creating relationships between individuals with CSBD and their members of their communities creates the opportunity for richer, more meaningful lives. When a community embraces adults with CSBD and their families there are mutual benefits.

The individual benefits socially and emotionally, the community benefits from these incredible citizens who can participate and contribute as valuable members of the community. And families can finally sleep at night knowing that their adult children now have loving and supportive relationships that will bring them joy throughout their lives – when the parents are no longer here to care for them.

